

Shawn Patenaude lives and practices law in Yorkton, Saskatchewan. He practices law primarily in the areas of real estate, commercial transactions, corporate, estate planning and estate administration but also handles a limited amount of civil litigation. Shawn was called to the bar in 2006 after articling under Justice D.H. Layh. Shawn practiced in Langenburg, Saskatchewan until 2011 at which time he opened a solo practice in Yorkton. Outside of his busy law practice, he is the Chairperson for an insurance company and is appointed as a hearing officer for the Office of Residential Tenancies. Shawn is married with three children aged 7, 9, and 12.

Shawn is interested in becoming a bencher so that he can contribute his skills and experiences to assist the Law Society with the challenges and opportunities arising for the legal profession, particularly those challenges and opportunities relating to rural legal services and the use of technology in law firms.
