

Tyne Hagey biography

I graduated from the University of Saskatchewan College of Law in 2015 and articulated with Legal Aid in Melfort, Saskatchewan. After I was called to the bar in 2016 I moved to Regina, Saskatchewan to practice in association at Andrews Benko and Associates. My primary practice area is criminal defence, and I also practice in the areas of family law, collaborative family law, wills and estates, and real estate. Although I am based in Regina, I frequently attend court at both the Provincial and Queen's Bench levels in Swift Current, Yorkton, Moose Jaw and Estevan.

I have managed my own law practice since my call to the bar in 2016 and know the pressures of growing and maintaining a successful private practice. As a young lawyer active in a variety of legal fields and in court I am properly positioned to understand the impact policies have on young lawyers, and the important role young lawyers play in their communities.

My practice involves daily contact with members of the public, and in particular, vulnerable members of the public. This experience, combined with my experience working at CLASSIC and volunteering at Pro-Bono Law, provides me with insight into issues surrounding public reception of legal services and access to justice.

In my spare time I enjoy cooking, playing flute in the Ukrainian Poltava Orchestra, and spending time with my husband and two dogs.
