

Christopher J. H. Donald, Q.C.

Chris is a partner at Robertson Stromberg. He has been member of the firm and the Saskatchewan Bar since 2000. Chris practices corporate commercial law and advises clients in the real estate, energy and agricultural sectors. He is one of the firm's transactional lawyers and is often called upon to act as Saskatchewan counsel in multi-jurisdictional transactions.

Chris has been one of Robertson Stromberg's managing partners since 2006.

He graduated with his LL.B. from Osgoode Hall Law School in 1988 and articulated with Lang Michener (now part of McMillan) in Toronto. Following Ontario's then lengthy bar course, Chris was called to the Ontario Bar in 1990. He practiced as a commercial litigator in Toronto with Lang Michener following articles and then in association with others in small firm settings until 1998 (taking a year out before then to complete his LL.M. at the University of Toronto).

From 1998 to 2000, Chris was an Assistant Professor at the University of Saskatchewan's College of Law, teaching Business Organizations and Contract Law. He has been a facilitator for the corporate/commercial section of the Saskatchewan Bar Course (both with SKLESI and then CPLED). Chris also served as a member of the Law Society of Saskatchewan's continuing legal education advisory committee. He was one of the founders of the St. Thomas More Lawyers Guild of Saskatoon and served as its president for many years. Chris has been and is involved in numerous community organizations.

He is currently a sessional lecturer at the College of Law teaching a seminar in Law & Economics, which he has done for several years.

Chris has been recognized by Lexpert, Chambers & Partners Law Guide and Best Lawyers.

Chris is offering his many years' experience as a lawyer and a managing partner to serve as a Bencher. With his commitment to legal education, he is particularly interested in ensuring that the Bar Course properly prepares new lawyers for practice and that all lawyers receive appropriate continuing legal education.
