Reasons for Running

One of the perks of being a practising lawyer over a number of years is being able to reflect on changes occurring over time. The Law Society has gone through such changes as operating with a minimal number of staff on behalf of membership, to its current number of administrative staff.

While this may be a necessary product of progress one should always be concerned that any bureaucracy may reach a stage where it becomes self-serving to justify its internal administration. Programs previously run by lawyers have now been taken over by Law Society administration.

If elected as a Bencher it would be my intention to conduct an audit of Law Society personnel and programs.
