Detecting Legal Problems & Legal Information Sources in Saskatchewan

Helping people detect their legal problems is important. When people recognize their legal problem, they can then look for legal information and get legal help. Knowing what the legal problems are will also help you point them to the right information and give them useful referrals to resources in their community.

Detecting issues that can evolve into legal problems is also helpful. Being aware of potential legal problems can help people avoid a legal problem or help them deal with one before it gets more serious. The following questions may help give you a sense of whether someone has a legal problem or a problem that may evolve into a legal problem.

Do they describe a life event?

When people come to you for help, do they mention a life event? A life event is something big that happens in a person's life that changes their situation. For example, getting married, separating from a spouse or partner, having children, losing a job, starting to get income support from the government, or being evicted from a home, are life events. Life events sometimes trigger legal problems.

Did they bring legal documents or legal forms?

When people come to you for help, do they bring or tell you about legal documents or letters they received, or forms they filled in or need to fill in? This kind of paperwork may tell you that their problem has a legal aspect.

Do their statements flag a legal problem?

When people come to you for help, do they say things that make you think this could be a legal problem? The following statements, for example, flag a legal problem: "My ex-partner has stopped paying child support as he's starting a new family." "My employer is always commenting on my appearance." "Are there any shelters close by?" "I have bedbugs and my landlord said he has no money to fix the problem."

If you aren't sure whether a problem is a legal one, check out one of the Public Legal Education Association's websites plea.org, familylaw.plea.org or newli.plea.org. The Public Legal Education Association is a non-profit organization that develops plain-language legal resources to help the public understand the law in their lives. On plea.org you can browse topics such as debts, criminal law or housing, or search for a key word and be directed to related resources. If the problem relates to a family issue, like divorce, support or custody, familylaw.plea.org has comprehensive information about all aspects of family law. If the person you are helping is new to Canada newli.plea.org has lots of information that is relevant for people who are new to Canada, including information on a wide-range of topics from how to get a drivers' licence to how to deal with discrimination in the workplace. If the person is experiencing workplace sexual harassment shift.plea.org has comprehensive plain-language information on this topic.

Saskatchewan.ca, the provincial government's website, is also a good place to start. You can look at the different sections, such as health or housing or use the search to find a particular term. You can search for forms and related information by entering the name of the form. If you are searching the name of a form you may want to put Saskatchewan in your search terms since forms with the same name could be used in different provinces.

Law librarians at the [Law Society of Saskatchewan's Legal Resource library](http://Law Society of Saskatchewan's Legal Resource library) can help direct you towards available sources of information about the law and make suggestions about who to contact for further assistance. Their courthouse law libraries in Regina and Saskatoon are open to the public. Contact them by phone or email: 306-569-8020 or 1-877-989-4999 or reference@lawsociety.sk.ca.

It also now has an Agreement Maker. The Family Law Information Centre also has help for people dealing with family law issues without a lawyer and self-help kits for starting and responding to family law cases. The Family Matters program run by the Saskatchewan Ministry of Justice can help families going through separation or divorce by providing access to information and resources to deal with a changing family situation, as well as assistance to resolve urgent and outstanding issues. The Department of Justice Canada also has a family law section on their website. There are also in-person help sessions in various locations around the province. These are listed on saskatchewan.ca.

Finding a Lawyer

If someone needs a lawyer they can use the find a lawyer function on the Law Society of Saskatchewan website. If they cannot afford a lawyer, Legal Aid Saskatchewan provides free legal representation services to youth and qualifying low-income adults in criminal and non-property family matters. Low income people who do not qualify for Legal Aid can try to get a pro bono (no cost) lawyer by contacting Pro Bono Law Saskatchewan.
